

Language Arts “This I believe” essay draft

“The passion lives on...” This is what my teacher always tells me. Truthfully, I did not know what it meant until one day, I found my own passion. To some people, passion can serve as a motivation to help them to keep on striving. However to me, passion is the joy I feel when doing something that I love. I believe that everyone has their own passion, something that they do that will make them feel really happy. Like everyone else, I have my own passion. Art is my passion; it gives me happiness, builds up my imagination and gives me an opportunity to display my creativity. It is something that I love, something that I create almost every day, something that I really enjoy doing.

Since young, I have been made to draw. When I was younger, I did not like it at all because I found it too troublesome and what’s more, I really had a big problem of drawing things proportionally. I felt very upset whenever I got a grade B and below for my art work that I had put in so much effort in, and therefore, I detested art. However, as I grow up, I was being introduced and exposed to more things that were related to art and I discovered that actually, art could be quite interesting. Thus, I was determined to try my very best in very single art work that I had to do. I persevered, and as time go by, I improved, doing better each time with the help of my art teacher. Gradually, I started to like art.

Whenever I finish an art piece, I will feel extremely touched and contented because it is something that I had spent hours of hard work on. Hence, completing an art piece means a lot to me, as it brings me joyful moments and gives me a sense of satisfaction and accomplishment. Even other people acknowledge my hard work and see the effort I have put in to complete every single art piece. I have had got praises from teachers, friends and family about my art work and therefore, I know that art is something worth to continue to pursue. I know that I will live it on because that is my passion.

You may wonder what actually gives me the inspiration to create an art piece, and I will answer that it is the passion burning in me that inspires. I fell in love with art because I found art to be really amazing. It is simply original, wild and creative. I can say that I love it so much now that it becomes so important till it turns into a part of my life. It drives away boredom and plays a significant role in lighting up my life, making it glow and come alive for me. I know it in my heart that my passion in art will never die off because “the passion lives on”.

Everyone is different, some may discover their passion earlier and faster than others but this is just a matter of time. I am fortunate that I have found mine early, but I believe that everyone will have something they are passionate in that they will discover sometime. When the time comes, just follow what your heart wants you to do and live the passion on.
